Sweating in un-fun places with Mr. Mailbag

Dear Mr. Mailbag,

We've had almost 20 days of temperatures in the triple-digits thus far and it's only July. Do you think we'll ever have cooler temperatures? Burning up, Local TV Weatherpeople who continues to predict rain and cooler temps.

Dear Eye-Candy Talking Weather,

While Mr. Mailbag is always as cool as the other side of the pillow, he has noticed that it has been rather warm and balmy as of late. While I've never been one to predict the weather, I would venture to say it's going to be hot, dry, hot, and hot in the coming weeks.

If you are too burning up in the outdoors, or in your older home with little insulation and energy efficiencies...now is a great time to purchase a nice and cool HD Home. Our homes are guaranteed to make you a cooler person and people will like you even more when they realize you've made a smart move. If you want to be cool and have people like you, call 817.737.0101 immediately!

Dear Mr. Mailbag,

It seems when I turn on the TV or radio I am hearing about radiant barrier and how it's a material that is supposed to help my new home be cooler. It looks like the aluminum foil that I used to put on the ground and lay on when I used to sunbathe.

Exactly what is radiant barrier and will it help me get a tan?
 Thanks for the info,
 Tanning Woman

Dear Saddlebag,

First of all I would suggest that you do not lay on aluminum foil and sunbathe. That just sounds so wrong on so many levels. You're not a potato (or as Dan Quayle would say... "p-o-t-a-t-o-e") so go find a towel to lay on or better yet, get out of the sun...that's not good for your skin!

As for radiant barrier...a great question. Mr. Mailbag and HD Homes love radiant barrier because it is a material that is found on the underside of your roof decking that reflects the radiant heat from the sun away from your roof thus making your attic cooler...which in turn makes your new HD Home cooler. All HD Homes now come standard with radiant barrier. It's just a little bonus you get when you make a smart move and buy a brand new HD Home.

You didn't know Mr. Mailbag was so smart did you?

Greetings Mr. Mailbag,

Is HD Homes going to take over the world? You seem to be the only new home builder in the area that is building what people want, what they can afford, and that doesn't look like some of those big box homes. Obviously you know what it takes...so are you planning for total world domination?

Thanks,
 B. Obama

Dear Mr. Prez,

Shouldn't you be more worried about the national debt limit or whatever? I appreciate that you (and many others) have realized that in three short years, HD Homes has already dominated the new home sales market in the Ft. Worth Cultural District and is on its way to being a man among boys in the North Ft. Worth and Arlington/Mansfield areas...but Mr. Mailbag does not have any plans to conquer the rest of the planet.

Mr. Mailbag is a busy fella with lots of hands to shake, babies to kiss and new HD Homes to sell...but come back in another three years and we'll re-visit this discussion.
